THE NEW FRAGRANCE FOR MEN

Heat Stroke

Our June issue made some carnies angry and had action-movie fans praying for our death. You guys are the best!

Child's Play

My three-year-old daughter picked up my copy of this month's Maxim with a bikini-clad Heather Graham on the cover. "This magazine is about swimming!" she shouted. Ahh, kids.

—Kevin Center, via e-mail

We're no parenting experts, but we're pretty sure that Maxim isn't appropriate reading material for a three-year-old. Highlights or Big Butts Weekly are probably better bets.

Doing Lines

Sure, sure—every Maxim reader will chime in about how you missed their favorite movie quote in your list of 100 "Killer One-Liners" [June], but this should have been included, from Brian Bosworth in Stone Cold (1991): After the Boz collects an ear from the victim and reports back to his boss, he says, "Let's just say I saved the guy a fortune in Q-tips." Bam!

—Dan Miller, via e-mail

It's not just a great line; it is sound economic advice as well. Think of all the money you'd save on gloves if you were lucky enough to get your hands caught in a blender!

When Arnold Schwarzenegger pins a guy to a pillar with a machete and says, "Stick around!"—that's from Commando, not Predator. Please send me a hat!

—Hueybomb, via e-mail

YOU HAVE E-MAIL.
We have an in-box. Send your love and hate to: letters@maxim.com

Sure, Hueybomb, we'll send you a hat—a dunce hat! The line in question was indeed uttered by Arnie in Predator. And to quote him one more time, "You're one ugly motherfucker!"

Her Cups Runneth Over

While cleaning my house the other day, I found your January issue and started reading it (because anything is better than housework). On page 22, Bar Trivia [Circus Maximus] states that a pair of C cup boobs weigh 2½ pounds. My girlfriend says that's crazy wrong! So we put her DDDs on the kitchen scale...21 pounds, or 10½ pounds each! No need to thank me for single-handedly advancing science, but feel free to send me some cool stuff. Or more large-breasted women who need their boobs weighed in my kitchen. Whatever.

—Ricardo Evans, via e-mail

Well, Ricardo, you have the thanks of the scientific community, and you also have us wondering how many times Louie, the guy at our local deli, has used his scale to weigh his "salami." Oh, did we say "wondering"? We meant "vomiting."

Is That a Blunt in Your Pocket?

In the $848 challenge with Snoop Lion [May], did you not realize that the picture of Rollo in his paper-thin prison suit was more revealing than Jon Hamm in tight Dockers? How could this slip an editor's eye? C'mon, Maxim! You're better than that!

—Kyle Robertson, via e-mail

Sorry, we don't sit around looking closely at dudes' bulges (we're definitely more ass men).

I Ain't No Clown

Regarding your "How to Talk Like a Carny" story [June], you actually give phrases that circus people use. Carnies like me find it offensive to be mistaken for circus people. (Imagine the dirty, toothless guy running the Tilt-A-Whirl getting all bent out of shape when you ask him where the bearded lady is.) Here's how to remember the difference: The circus keeps its animals in cages, while the carnival lets them run rides.

—Kerry, via e-mail

Our apologies, you dirty, toothless animal.

WE GOT IT IN THE MAIL

Jerk Machine

We like our meat like we like our sea captains: salty and shriveled. So it was a joyous day when a jerky maker appeared in our mailbox. The Camouflage Excalibur dehydrator preserves food by removing the moisture and is, as the note reads, "perfect for hunters." Or lazy desk-jockey shut-ins like us. We can finally hold our office meat-drying competition, the Great Maxim Jerk-Off! $400, excaliburdehydrator.com

Each month MAXIM empties its sack for you.

"Be vewwy, vewwy quiet. I'm making wabbit jerky."

Now if you would kindly unglue those milk bottles so we can win our kid a boot-leg SpongeBob doll already?

Love Letter

I love your Letters page. Your responses crack me up!

—Bradley Bobbs, via e-mail

Thanks, Mom! Er, we mean "Bradley."

Hats Off to Hotties

I see the Hometown Hotties is going on again, and I think I recall you guys having a hot-mom one a while ago. I was wondering when or if you will be doing a MILF edition again, and what would be the requirements to enter?

—Adriana, via e-mail

OK, seriously, Mom, you really have to stop writing to us here.

As an avid Maxim reader and a fan of the Hometown Hotties, I first want to congratulate you guys on the awesome selection of contestants you have gathered this year. I follow every year, and they have never been as hot as now.

—Isaiah Johnson, via e-mail

While past years have not exactly been filled with chopped meat (except that one weird year when we decided to declare the sexiest hamburger in America), we do agree that this crop of contenders is especially hot. We think it's due to our organic-farming efforts. Flip on over to page 86 to see the top 100, and vote for your favorites at Maxim.com.

Oh, God, You Devil

I recently played the role of Jacob in a production of Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat. This shot was taken while I was waiting for the show to start. I would have sent this sooner, but Internet service in biblical times really sucked.

—Timothy Slisky, via e-mail

So that explains that odd passage in Genesis: "And Adam unplugged and plugged back in his router like the Verizon tech support guy said, but it still didn't work. And it was bad."

DRILL, BABY, DRILL

Dial-a-Reader

Underground driller SHANE DOOLEY sent us this picture and note: "Although we are deprived of sunlight, we always bring a little ray of sunshine down under with us. Thank you, Maxim, and God bless Jennifer Love Hewitt!" Our chief content officer gave him a call.

DAN: What are you drilling for down there?
SHANE: Gold.

Have you ever been tempted to sneak a nugget in your pocket?

I have been, but, you know, where I work it's basically microscopic gold—you can't see it.

I must commend your restraint on not making any drilling jokes in your letter.

Yeah, well, drilling can be very, very sexual, because you're jamming a rod down a hole; you run a swabber down the backside; you have to grease the rod sometimes to get it in.

Wow, I'm gonna hang up and take a cold shower now. Thanks for reading!

EDITORS' NOTE

A September to Remember

Hey there, reader person. Sure, this is technically the September issue, but happily, there will still be a few weeks of summer left when it comes out. Which means we here at Maxim will continue with casual Fridays (no pants, no problem!) and toasting each correctly spelled word with a nutritious piña colada. Brain freeze never felt so good.

Keen-eyed observers will note that we've dubbed this The Tough Issue, but trust us, there was nothing tough about making it (except all those tiny-piña-colada-umbrellas-to-the-eyeball injuries). How can you complain about hanging out with awesome folks like cover model Ronda Rousey, smart-ass superstar Don Rickles, and big-bucks boxer Floyd Mayweather Jr.? We bet you can't, and we bet that's a bet Floyd would gladly take.

We hope you enjoy the issue and what's left of summer. And when the chill does return to the air, we'll have Jason Sudeikis to thank for helping us dress in nicer threads. (We stole his jacket when he was trying on clothes for our big style story on page 75.) Thanks for reading!

GET TO KNOW...

Sharni Vinson

The Aussie beauty stars in this month's movie bloodbath You're Next. Let's find out more!

Hometown: Sydney, Australia

Job: Actress

Astrological sign: Cancer

Pet: Mocha, my chocolate Lab

Three things I can't live without:

1. Family 2. Friends 3. Love

I can whoop any guy's ass in you name it!

My hidden talent is I can stick my tongue up my nose.

My go-to drink is a Wet Pussy shot.

My spirit animal is a mole.

The worst word in the universe is "can't".

My favorite line from a movie is "Nobody puts baby in a corner," from Dirty Dancing.

The most embarrassing song on my iPad is "Kiss the Girl," from
The Little Mermaid.

I would rather date a rabid chimpanzee than a man who looks like a rabid chimpanzee.

My favorite way to get in trouble is by creating it.

DISCOVERY ZONE

Get Better at Everything Without Doing Anything!

Want to improve yourself? Just open your stupid eyes, says science.

GET STRONGER!

You could spend hours at the gym humiliating yourself doing Zumba. Or you could just flip through a comic book. A new University at Buffalo study found that superhero-loving men who looked at Batman pics not only felt better about their bodies but were also stronger immediately afterward. Just in time to punch the jerk making fun of you for carrying around Batman photos.

WORK HARDER!

Baby cows and lambs aren't just great in stews—they'll also make you a better worker. A study from the Hiroshima University in Japan says that looking at pictures of baby animals improves productivity. So tell your boss that when he catches you watching "Puppy and Duckling Are BFFs" on YouTube. Again.

EAT LIKE A KING!

If your cooking sucks, a study from the Nestlé Research Center in Switzerland has a solution. Looking at pictures of delicious food as you eat your bland, gross slop tricks your brain into thinking what you're eating isn't so shitty. Mmm, perfectly grilled rib eye with just a hint of color correction.

The real horror was finding out how much the baby charged to check the transmission fluid.

GAG REEL

Porn Bloopers of the Month

What Inglorious Bitchies lacks in historical accuracy it makes up for in exploding naked Nazis.

Set during WWII in Europe, Inglorious Bitchies features a team of rebel soldiers (née prostitutes) training to take down, and go down on, the enemy. (Sample training chant: "We're the Inglorious Bitches, and we love to fuck!") But while they were banging Nazis, then blowing 'em up, we spied a barbell tongue piercing on a recruit. Tongue rings didn't get popular in Western civilization until the 1980s, so unless she's a time traveler or an Aztec warrior, this movie is completely unrealistic. $40, wickedpictures.com

Nothin' to Lose: The Making of Kiss (1972–1975)

The early days of rock's face-painted menaces are documented in this chronicle, which we hope will solve one enduring mystery: Who the hell convinced Peter Criss that cat makeup was a cool look?

Hit This Gig

Riot Fest: Toronto, Chicago, Denver

This music festival, taking place over different weekends in different cities, features everyone from Blink-182 to Public Enemy. But the real draw is the first set of live shows in 22 years from indie legends the Replacements.

Buy This Box Set

The Clash, Sound System

For punks the Clash were never ones to keep things simple. After all, this is a band that once released a triple album. So fans shouldn't be surprised by this new 13-disc, boombox-shaped box set. If you're a fan of "the only band that matters," this is the only release that matters.

Download This Track
Avicii, "Wake Me Up"

With 2011's "Levels," this Swedish DJ provided the dance-happy masses with the defining anthem of the EDM movement. On this, the first single off his new album, #TRUE, he combines country, folk, and soul before finally dropping the bass. And damned if it doesn't work!

Rachel Bilson

The Hart of Dixie actress air-dries after a dip in the ocean. Consequently, we're going to need a towel.

The year was 2003. Rachel Bilson had just entered our lives as sassy Summer Roberts on the teen drama The O.C., and soon she became our favorite imaginary girlfriend. (Don't tell Sarah Michelle Gellar.) A decade later and the 31-year-old stunner still makes our hearts pitter-patter when we watch her play a small-town doctor in Hart of Dixie. It's not easy making an imaginary relationship last for so long, but thankfully she knows how to keep the spark alive. (Exhibit A: Photo at right.) So happy fake 10-year anniversary, Rachel! And may we have many, many more.

Aaron Paul

Listen in on what Breaking Bad's loyal sidekick has got cooking for his final day...bitch!

How do you want to go?

I would like to go peacefully. Maybe lying in a hammock on an island somewhere after eating a bunch of coconuts.

Do you have any death-bed confessions?

I hate musicals. There, I said it.

Will you be going to heaven or hell, and why?

I'm not really sure about all that—I'm getting cremated.

What if you had to spend eternity in an RV with Bryan Cranston in his tighty-whities? Is that heaven or hell?

Is that a serious question? Heaven, of course.

What's your last meal?

Pizza and root beer.

You were once a contestant on The Price Is Right. What's the ultimate final prize you'd want to win?

To have Bob Barker be my personal butler and chef for eternity. That and maybe an island.

Name one thing you're glad you'll never have to do again on Earth.

Pay for gas.

What's the wildest thing you ever did while you were alive?

I rode a shark once. I wouldn't recommend it. It was fun, but I thought I was going to get eaten the entire time! Nothing against sharks. I love sharks. I just don't think we are meant to ride them.

If you could come back and spy on someone who's still alive, who would it be and why?

I'd spy on my wife and make sure she's mourning just enough but not too much. And then I would come back and haunt her—not in a bad, scary way, but in a good way, like, "Hey, babe, I love you so much and miss you, but don't get scared and judge me...because I'm dead!"

Who would be a more irritating partner for all of eternity, Badger or Skinny Pete?

Man, that's a tough one. I think maybe Badger would be more annoying. I find Skinny Pete to be kind of charming and endearing. Breaking Bad fans, you know what I'm talking about!

What woman did you always want to sleep with?

I'm not going to answer that question.

What are people saying over your casket?

Hopefully anything but "finally" in a soft whisper.

Got any last words? (Hints about how Breaking Bad is going to end?)

Ha! I'm not telling you anything about the show! I would say, "It's been a fun ride. Thanks for having me to the party." And to my beautiful wife, "I will miss you forever, my pretty little bird. I can't wait to haunt the shit out of you!"

Breaking Bad is back Sundays on AMC at 9 P.M.

BLING

FOR YOUR BREATH

Introducing the world's most delightful breath mint.
New Mentos Breath Mints.

Jiggle What?

KEN ORINGER, chef at Clio Restaurant in Boston, whips up a highbrow jello shot for low-brow slurping. Your move, Bill Cosby.

CLIO JELLO SHOTS

"We combined tart lime juice with Cointreau and vodka," says Oringer. "The cayenne gives it a spicy kick, but the mint is refreshing and cooling, so it's well-balanced."

(Makes 6-8)

- 1 oz. lime juice
- 1 oz. simple syrup (equal parts sugar and water, sugar dissolved)
- 1/4 oz. gelatin sheet or powder
- 4 oz. vodka
- 1 oz. Cointreau
- Sea salt, fresh mint leaves, and cayenne for garnish

Pour the lime juice and simple syrup into a mixing bowl, then add gelatin and let sit for three minutes. Microwave for 20 seconds, until the gelatin just melts. Add the vodka and Cointreau, pour into shot glasses, and refrigerate until set. Before serving, remove from the fridge so they warm up just a bit (enough to become slightly wiggly) and top with sea salt, fresh mint leaves, and some cayenne pepper. Slurp away.

Where were these when we got our tonsils out?

Is it possible to literally puke your guts out?

—Natalie Kersten

"Usually you only puke out bile and recently ingested food," says Richard Desi, M.D., gastroenterologist at Mercy Medical Center. "During severe episodes, you may notice what looks like tissue in your barf," he adds. "But that's just the inside lining of your intestines being constantly shed and replaced." Gross! Makes us wanna barf our guts out.

Why do I have to pay $5 more to see a 3D movie?

—Martin Clark

Jason Lewin, director of marketing for American Paper Optics, blames the projector: "The eyes must see two different images—one for the right and one for the left. So theaters have to spend money on digital projectors and a lens that then splits the screen for 3D viewing." Now if he can explain why movie theater popcorn costs $25...

Can you catch a disease from a licked envelope?

—Pete Sadoff

Put it this way: Any mail marked BIRD FLU, SPECIAL DELIVERY! should be returned to sender. Although cold and flu viruses only survive between a few minutes and two days, sealing them in glue can extend their lives. "DNA and germs can last decades on licked envelopes," says Charles E. Crutchfield, medical director at the University of Minnesota Medical School. So think twice about using your tongue as a letter opener.

A man walks into a bar and takes a seat next to a very attractive woman. He gives her a quick glance, then casually puts his watch to his forehead and smiles. The woman notices this and asks, "What are you doing?" He says, "I just bought this state-of-the-art watch, and I was testing it." The woman asks, "What's so special about it?" "It telepathically talks to me," he explains. "What's it telling you?" "Well, it says you're not wearing any panties..." The woman giggles and replies, "Well, it must be broken then, because I am wearing panties!" The man says, "Damn thing must be an hour fast." — MARC SMITH

How To

A 90-foot plunge in Wadi Shab, Oman. Twenty minutes later LoBue finally hit the water.

Take a Flying Leap

Red Bull cliff diver STEVEN LOBUE talks you through a 90-foot dive. Try not to break your neck.

1 JOIN A CIRCUS
“The main places for cliff divers to start out are traveling stunt shows at fairs or theme parks. You’ll climb up a 100-foot ladder and jump into a small pool, and from there divers will go, OK, what’s my next challenge? You start adding the technical maneuvers once you’re comfortable with the height.”

2 KNOW YOUR PLACE
“There are so many external factors to consider in these exotic locations. Swirling winds will push you around like a rag doll. Ocean swells can change hundreds of hours of practice in an instant. Shallow waters have almost cost a diver his life by snapping his femur like a twig.”

3 GO MENTAL
“Before bed every night re-create how the dive feels emotionally. Your nervous system will kick into overdrive, your heart speeds up, so practice calming yourself down. I’ve frozen on the platform. If something bad crosses your mind, you have to reassess what you’re doing. Keep thinking positively.”

4 GO HIGHER
“It seems counterintuitive since you’re already 90 feet in the air, but a stronger takeoff has a high correlation with a vertical entry. A wimpy takeoff will affect your ability to do all the flips and twists, and you’ll only have a split second to figure out how to make the best of the situation.”

5 FEET FIRST
“Keep your legs together and your arms straight down to break a hole in the water. And land as vertical as possible. Once I was a few degrees off and cracked my tailbone. Water can turn into concrete at the wrong angle.”

How To

Get a 4-Hour Body in 20 Minutes!

4-Hour mastermind TIM FERRISS motivates you to get your ass outside and in shape quickly.

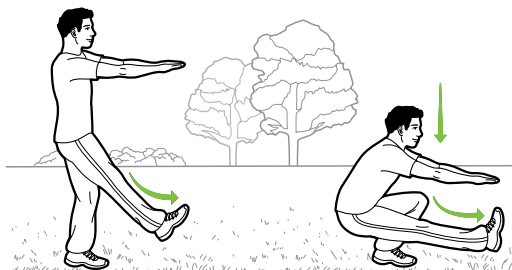

→ Your mom was just trying to get rid of you when she told you to go play outside, but it turns out that exercising in nature has benefits beyond leaving Mama alone with her chardonnay. Sports research shows that being exposed to natural imagery during breaks actually improves your mental performance. (And helps you snag dates with squirrels.) So here are Tim Ferriss' four moves to take outside and whip you into shape—in 20 minutes or less!

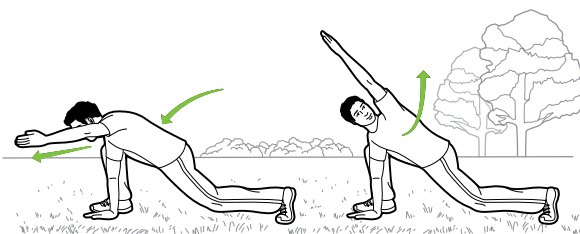

Engaging a chipmunk in a stare-down

 THE CAT CRAWL This warm-up move also stimulates the nervous system. Put your hands on the ground and keep your hips at the same level or lower than your shoulders. Make sure your legs draft behind you within your shoulders. The Bear Crawl is a variation where you keep your arms and legs straight and whip your legs out side to side. Go forward and backward for 25 feet each way.

 THE PISTOL Deceptively simple, this is essentially a one-legged squat that works as a strength, balance, and flexibility exercise. Make sure your support foot is flat and firm on the ground, extend your other leg, and keep your thighs close together. Stand upright with your arms stretched out in front of you and squat down. Repeat two to three times on each side.

 THE TRAP WALK This stretch move aids muscle activation and mobility. Step into a lunge with the right leg, place both hands on the ground, and raise your left shoulder up and back, followed by the arm at a 10 o'clock angle. Rotate to the left as fully as possible, return hand to the ground, and bring your feet together. Repeat on the other side and alternate back and forth five times on each side.

 THE BLURPEE This is a variation of the burpee, a typical military exercise, except this version engages the lats and abs. Start by placing your legs about a foot outside your shoulders, squat, bend into a full, proper push-up, then jump your legs forward right outside your shoulders, and jump up with your arms in the air. Repeat as many times as possible for five minutes.

Tell If Your Online Girlfriend Is Real

Filmmaker and Catfisher MAX JOSEPH on avoiding becoming the next Manti Te'o.

Don't Date "Models"

"Claiming to be a model is the most common lie—and it doesn't stop there. They'll pad it with things like 'model/doctor.' Think about how rare that is."

Dream Girls Rarely Exist

"Occasionally it's someone you know—an old friend, an ex—that's messing with you. They know exactly the type of girl you're going to go for, so if she seems too good to be true, she probably is."

Study Their Background

"If she's just sending you selfies or half-naked glamour shots against a white wall, that's a red flag. And if no one else is tagged in her Facebook pictures, that's another warning."

Use Your Name

"If she can't video-chat, ask her to send you a photo of herself holding up a piece of paper with your name on it. That's a picture you can't steal through a Google image search!"

Their Life Is a Soap Opera

"Often these 'girlfriends' can't visit you because of something dramatic: Their mom had a car accident or they have cancer and are relapsing and have to go to the hospital. They invent these grave scenarios which you'd have to be a dick to call them out on."

Build a Mint Tin Catapult

Let this serve as a warning to all your bad-breathed buddies.

Supplies:

- 1 plastic spoon
- 1 mint tin (Altoids or similar)
- Duct tape
- 1 medium binder clip (32 mm)
- 1 playing card
- Safety goggles
- Scissors
- Hot-glue gun

1 Cut the handle of the spoon short enough to hide it in the tin. Tape it onto the metal handle of the binder clip.

2 To anchor the spoon-clip, cut the card to the same width as the interior of the tin. Then cut a section off the card that is the same width as the binder clip. Glue the segment to the interior of the clip as shown.

Cut a second segment off the card that's longer than the binder-clip handles and glue it on the top surface of the handle as shown.

3 Fill the tin with hot glue and press your assembled catapult on top. Once the glue cools, strap your goggles on and start launching the mints! (For you fatties out there, mini-marshmallows work, too.)

Land Your Dream Job

Stunt driver ROBERT NAGLE, who's worked on films like Talladega Nights, on how to drive into Hollywood.

DRIVE EVERYTHING

Guys should familiarize themselves with as many cars as possible so they can step into anything and be comfortable. Chauffeur your grandma around in whatever old thing she owns, borrow your friend's off-road truck, and know how to drive a stick shift—that goes without saying.

BE OK AT THE BOTTOM

Sometimes extras are hired as background drivers and get paid to drive around or sit in traffic with their own cars. You won't be a part of the action, but you will be on set, so you can get an idea of what the environment is like and how a stunt sequence is run.

HANG OUT WITH MOTORHEADS

You've got to develop a trusting relationship with people who are already in this industry, and it's not just in Los Angeles anymore. There's filming in New Mexico, Atlanta, and Louisiana, so get to where the action is, get out of the car, and start talking to people.

HIT THE BOOKS BEFORE THE GAS

Stunt-driving schools can be good for learning basic maneuvers and the fundamentals of car control. Plus, being able to follow directions is what really makes a great stunt driver. If you're not precisely where you need to be at the required second, it could be a disaster.

Crack a Safe

Brown Safe VP

LYNEL BERRYHILL

has a few tips on how to penetrate their product.

1 "Finding the safe can be hard. I've installed vaults behind bookshelves and incorporated them into shoe racks: These safes are usually accessed by sensors, so look around for buttons or remote controls."

2 "Look for the combination. I'd say 25 percent of people write it on the safe or nearby. Examine calendars or photos as well—birthdays and anniversaries are common."

3 "About 95 percent of safes are made of thin sheet metal; the walls only look thick because of the way the metal is bent. You can pry these open at the seams with three large screwdrivers and a crowbar."

4 "If it's a sophisticated safe, you'll need a pricey magnetic drill to destruct a couple of key internal components, like the bolt work and the locking mechanism. That's where experience or illegal access to companies' safe plans is handy."

5 "Once you have created a hole, use a microscopic video camera probe to view the inner workings of the safe. You can usually figure out how to open the safe from looking inside."

6 "You're in! But go back to Step 1, 'cause the most valuable items may be hidden in a secret compartment inside the actual safe."

Benz on a Budget

Say guten tag to the slick new CLA250, a Mercedes that even we can afford!

You've got to be pretty damn sexy to appear next to Kate Upton and still get anyone to look at you, but that's exactly what the all-new Mercedes-Benz CLA250 pulled off in one of the best spots of this year's Super Bowl. Not only is it almost as curvy as our favorite bombshell, but its sub-$30K sticker price had us choking on our seven-layer dip. We had the chance to drive the baby Benz, which hits dealerships this month, and good looks are just the beginning. The four-door coupe sticks to the road like chewed-up Trident on your shoe, and its direct-steer system and sport suspension provide tons of road feel. When we needed to blow by lesser vehicles, the seven-speed dual-clutch automatic—which we kept in sport mode—downshifted perfectly. (The 208 horses didn't hurt, either.) Kate, we love you, but maybe it's time we see other Benzes.

I GO STRAIGHT-UP NINJA WHEN PEOPLE TRY TO TICKLE ME.

Season 18 of The Ultimate Fighter on Fox Sports 1 is going to have a decidedly more feminine touch—one that'll still beat people to a bloody pulp, but girly nonetheless. Because for the first time ever, not only will lady fighters compete for a UFC contract, but the team coaches will also be women, one of whom is the beautiful—and brutal—Ronda Rousey. The 26-year-old former Olympian in judo (she took bronze in Beijing in 2008) is the right ass-kicker for the job: She's won titles in Strikeforce and UFC and is the best pound-for-pound female MMA fighter. And for her most impressive title of all, she landed at 29 on our 2013 Hot 100 list. She didn't even have to arm-bar us for it!

Congrats on making Maxim's Hot 100! As someone who's so competitive, do you feel there are any women who outranked you who don't deserve it?

It would have been really funny if I'd beaten [UFC Octagon Girl] Arianny Celeste, because that would be like a triathlete coming along and beating the runners in a marathon. Like, "Ha-ha, it's your job to show your titties—I do that better than you!" Maybe next year. She's only getting older, and I'm reaching my prime.

With female fighters joining The Ultimate Fighter house this year, is it going to be like a violent version of Bachelor Pad?

I don't think so, but it's all those unknown factors that are making everyone so excited for the season. They're all grown adults, and I'm not their baby-sitter. If they want to make fools out of themselves, that's their choice.

During the Strikeforce bantamweight championship against Miesha Tate, you delivered what was called "one of the most savage arm-bars in history." What was going through your head as you watched her elbow bend backward?

I knew her arm was out, but she was still trying to escape with a bridge, so I was trying to put her arm in my other hand. I was sitting up trying to punch her with my right hand when she finally gave up. I didn't feel bad about it—I was reacting to the situation. I treat the fight like it's up for grabs until the very end.

Have you kept a tally of your own injuries?

Not at all. I mean, I've separated my shoulder and my collarbone; I've messed up my knee a million times. I've broken my foot in several places. I've broken my toe a bunch, broken my nose a couple of times, and had a bunch of other annoying little injuries, like turf toe and arthritis and tendinitis. It's part of the game. It's not like I work at Build-A-Bear, you know?

Is there anything that makes you squeamish?

Paper cuts.

Really?

Yeah. Ugh, I got a paper cut the other day, and I had chills for, like, an hour. I hate paper cuts. Talking about it right now makes me uneasy.

Which of these illegal MMA moves would you be more opposed to becoming legal: hair pulling or tickling?

Tickling! I'm unbelievably ticklish. When I was a little kid, my sisters would hold me down and tickle me until I peed my pants. I'm so traumatized that I go straight-up fucking ninja when people try to tickle me.

Do you have any prefight rituals?

Something needs to go wrong. If things are going smoothly, I get really suspicious. There's always some kind of chaotic event that happens—I don't have my mouth guard, or a pit bull bites me on the foot, or I can't find my passport—and once I take care of that one thing, it absorbs all of my anxiety.

You've said you try to have sex before a fight, too...

It's just a medical fact: As a girl, if you have sex before a fight, it raises your testosterone. People are fascinated by it because that is one difference between men and women. You know, the guys really have to abstain, and the girls are kind of medically encouraged to do the opposite.

If it's available to me, then I'm all for it, but otherwise I'm kind of out of luck.

So what are you looking for in a fella?

Confidence is the number one thing I find attractive. It's not that he needs to be able to beat me in an arm wrestle, but if he's too intimidated to come up and talk to me, how is he going to handle the rest of the shit that I bring along?

What is on Ronda's list of dude no-nos?

Don't come up and tell me arm-bar jokes. I'm so full of arm-bar jokes that when someone comes up to me and talks about them, I'm just like, "Fail! You're out."

Well, it is your signature fight move. Speaking of, do you have any signature moves in the sack?

No. I think if you have a signature move, then you're kind of doing the same shit every time. I try to be creative. I'm one of the best grapplers in the world, so I think I'm much more comfortable moving around while lying down than other girls are.

What's the girliest thing about you?

I'm a big crier. I never cry when something is painful, but I cry if things are frustrating. Like if I'm trying to do something and I mess up over and over. If I'm playing a video game and I can't beat a level that I've tried 10 times, I'll cry. When I was a kid, I think I cried for every practice from 2003 to the middle of 2006.

You were kind of a crybaby!

At first I was bawling, but now I'm balling. 🐼 or 11 saintly seasons, Reverend Camden and his family ruled the WB with their unique brand of squeaky-clean hijinks on 7th Heaven. But now Mackenzie Rosman, who played curly-haired cutie Ruthie, is 23 years old, gorgeous, and ready to let the world know. She spends her days pursuing her acting career, collecting stamps, and, well, being extremely good-looking. So please enjoy these sinfully hot photos, and we'll meet up with you later in the confessional.

Will people be surprised to see you looking like this?
They might be. But you know what? It's who I am.

What was it like working with Jessica Biel, who played your big sis on 7th Heaven?

I looked up to Jessie a lot. She and I connected; we were just more alike than the others.

Do you remember when she did that topless shoot for Gear magazine while she was on the show?

I was probably nine at the time, but I remember that. It was a big deal. The magazine was banned on set, I think by orders of Aaron Spelling. I sneaked a peek at it, though. It was racy gossip amongst the women of 7th Heaven!

Stephen Collins and Catherine Hicks, who played your parents on the show, have both been in Star Trek movies. Are you a Trekkie?

I like Star Wars. I mean, I don't go to the conventions and dress up like Obi-Wan Kenobi or anything, but I like watching the movies.

Now, we have always wondered: Why was everybody on the show blond except for you?

I think that was something we pushed under the rug. I've heard some pretty interesting theories, like I was adopted from Puerto Rico or the mom had a tryst with somebody. I don't know.

Are there any 7th Heaven drinking games?

No, but I would like to see one. You could drink whenever Ruthie rolls her eyes or when Lucy squeals.

Tell us about the movies you have coming up.

I've got Ghost Shark, which is a TV movie on Syfy. It's about a shark that's terrorizing an entire town. Then there's Nightcomer, where I play a vampire who's running around Italy killing people. That was a lot of fun.

Ruthie killing people?!

Uh-huh. But she only kills the bad people, so it's OK. And the other movie is Beneath, which is about a man-eating fish that attacks some teenagers on a summer trip.

Jeez, killer fish are everywhere! Is there anything fans would be surprised to know about you?

I'm a philatelist.

A what now?

A philatelist. I collect stamps.

That sounds dirty.

Oh, yeah. I've been doing it since I was six or seven. I have a whole book!

Are you dating anybody right now?

Well, you'll have to ask my boyfriend.

Got it. What's the first thing you notice in a guy?

Manners. Like, just be respectful. I don't deal with the whole bad boy who doesn't call you. That doesn't interest me at all, and I just look the other way.

Do you have a celebrity crush?

I used to have a really big crush on Hayden Christensen.

It makes sense that Obi-Wan Kenobi would have a crush on Anakin Skywalker.

It makes total sense. He just seems really tortured. ♥

DIVA FEVER

WorldMags.net

P

Pro wrestler turned reality star Eva Marie took a break from body-slammin' to talk about nip slips, kicking some Kardashian butt, and never, ever giving up. Catch her Sundays on E! in Total Divas and on August 18 in WWE SummerSlam on pay-per-view.

You look incredible. How was the shoot?

It was amazing. I truly felt like the definition of a Diva.

Did you grow up on pro wrestling?

My brothers were huge fans, so I watched it in the Hulk Hogan and Randy Savage "Snap into a Slim Jim" era.

What sort of kid grows up to be a WWE Diva?

I was a major tomboy. I have three older brothers, so you can only imagine how that was growing up. Plus, I'm Mexican-Italian, so you kind of have to have a little bit of fire.

Do you have any advice for readers who might be interested in breaking into the WWE world?

My advice is to never stop. It finally happened because I kept knocking on the door.

How many hours a week do you put in as a Diva?

It's a 24/7 job, baby!

Sounds like it. Do you have a prematch ritual?

I keep to myself and zone out a little bit to make sure I'm completely focused. While I'm getting ready, I'll listen to music, get hyped up, and then, right before, I'll say a little prayer. Then I'm out.

Does anything funny ever happen inside the ring?

All the time! We're girls, and wardrobe malfunctions happen, but we try to limit that as best we can.

How do you do that?

A lot of tape.

WWE has many celebrity guests, from the Muppets to Charlie Sheen. If you could book any celebrity to make a guest appearance, who would it be?

Tom Hardy. He's one of my favorite actors right now, and he looks like he could be a badass in the ring.

Were you a fan of reality TV before Total Divas?

I'm a fan of the Kardashians.

Would you ever step into the ring with Kim?

Bring it on, Kim K.! I would love her to step into the ring.

What would you be doing if you weren't a Diva?

There isn't another option. I had to go until I got this. ♡

PICKS AND PREDICTIONS!

1 ROGER GOODELL WILL...

BE CAUGHT SWIMMING IN A SCROOGE MCDOCK-LIKE SILO OF GOLD

The NFL makes more than $9 billion in annual revenue, but for some reason 60 percent of players disapprove of the commissioner. Maybe that's because he made almost $30 million in 2011...over $10 million more than any player. It's no wonder that when SI named Goodell the most powerful figure in sports, he was shown sitting on the Iron Throne, looking even less sympathetic than King Joffrey. And that ain't easy.

CLAY MATTHEWS

Will Be Asked Where His Big-Ass Hammer Is

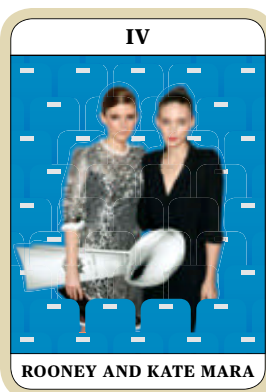

Chris Hemsworth makes for a fine Thor, but he's got nothing on the Packers' golden-maned sack machine. If Matthews ever grew a flowing 'stache, donned a horned helmet, and joined the Vikings, he could be the first NFL player to double as team mascot. (And just like that, two million Green Bay fans threw up.)

JAY CUTLER

Will Get Hit in the Face With a Kielbasa

Really, all the 61,500 die-hard Bears fans at Soldier Field look for in their players is a little passion, and few players' faces say passion less than the highly punchable Cutler, who actually requested that fans "quiet the stadium down" when the Bears are in the red zone! Better learn how to duck, homey.

ROONEY AND KATE MARA

Will Get Great Seats for Super Bowl XLVIII

The super-foxy Mara sisters are not only, well, super foxy, but Rooney (The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo) and Kate (House of Cards) are also NFL royalty: One great-granddad founded the Steelers and another the Giants. With New York hosting this season's big game, we have to ask: Will either of you marry us?

Joe Buck Will...

Be Approved by the USDA as a Geriatric Sleep Aid

As the turgid play-by-play announcer of Fox's "Game You're Most Likely to Pass Out To of the Week," Buck has the self-importance of a man describing what's happening on a screen you watch with your very own eyes, thereby refuting the need for his very existence. Not only that, but after hearing him drone on, we're positive Buck's voice has been medically classified as aural Ambien.

Referee Ed Hochuli Will...

Hunt Down That Guy in the Stands Who Shouted, "Get New Glasses!" and Punch Him in the Face With His Triceps

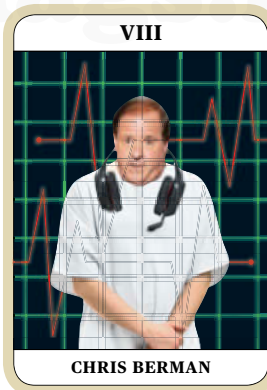

Football's populated by big, strong men. Dudes whose calf muscles could house the cast of Little People, Big World. Yet somehow the guy with the most freakish physique is a 62-year-old attorney whose most impressive gridiron achievement was making the all-WAC academic team in 1972. But it's Ed Hochuli's control and understanding of the game, and not his biceps, that make him the most popular official since Frank Drebin, er, Enrico Pallazzo, was busting splits in The Naked Gun.

Tom Brady Will...
Get Lost in the Gaze
of His Own Reflection

Mr. Gisele's propensity for racking up TDs against defenseless opponents and his coddling via the refs make him one of the most loathed players outside the municipal borders of Quincy, Mass. Then again, have you seen the way he rocks a pair of Uggs? God, he's such a sex castle.

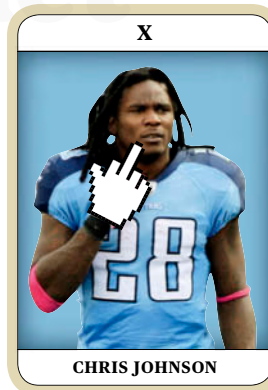

VIII

CHRIS BERMAN

Will Be Hospitalized for Uncontrollable Hooting

It's amazing to watch old ESPN footage from back when Boomer was a relatively calm, thoughtful analyst, before his descent into a bumbling, fumbling, nickname-spewing blowhard. Please, just go back, back, back to the old Berman. Or at least shelve that stupid-ass "whoop!" shouty thing you do on SportsCenter.

X

CHRIS JOHNSON

Will Make You Curse Yourself for Picking Him in the First Round of Your Fantasy Draft (Again)

Titans fans may decry CJ2K for his 2011 contract holdout, but the rest of us hate his guts for being fantasy-football poison. In 2012 he ran for a combined 45 yards over the first three games of the season. Of course, as soon as you put him on the bench, he breaks off a 141-yard performance...followed by a 24-yard shit show right after you start him again. This cycle continues until you dropkick your laptop and swear off fantasy football for good.

NDAMUKONG SUH WILL...

BE THE FIRST NFL PLAYER FLAGGED FOR BITING AN OPPONENT'S TESTICLES ON MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL

Suh's been in the NFL only four years, but fellow players have already voted the Lions' lineman its dirtiest player. Twice. And fans voted him the least likable. That's what happens when you regularly stomp on your opponents and kick 'em in the genital region. Ndamukong, if you want to get invited to more pool parties, you have to ease back on that shit.

XI

Tony Romo Will... Cause the Citizens of Dallas to Slit Their Wrists in Unison

It's not that the Cowboys signal caller is a terrible QB, exactly. He's put up some good numbers, made a few Pro Bowls, and dated his share of hotties. But there's no one with a better (worse?) record of snatching defeat from the jaws of victory than Romo, which is why his newly signed $108 million contract extension drives Cowboys fans to the brink of suicide.

BILL BELICHICK WILL...

BE CAUGHT IN HIS BASEMENT STITCHING

TOGETHER A SUIT MADE OF PEOPLE

We know, Bill Belichick has led the Patriots to five Super Bowls since 2002. He's a very good football coach. Maybe even a genius. An evil genius. With his soulless gaze, mumbly voice, and diabolical machinations, you just know that Belichick has a recipe in his notebook for fava beans and Rex Ryan's liver with a nice Chianti.

XIII

Dan Snyder Will... Sue Us Before We Even Finish Typing This Senten—D'oh!

The Napoleonic owner of the Redskins has taken front-office shenanigans to near-cartoon-villain heights. The media and fans alike have criticized him for hits including: refusing to develop young players, dismissing coaches who won't fall in line, outlawing all fan signs at games, suing season ticket holders unable to pay because of the recession, suing a sportswriter, refusing to change his team's racist name, and giving the finger to a school bus full of nuns. Fine, he may not have done one of those things, but are you really sure which?

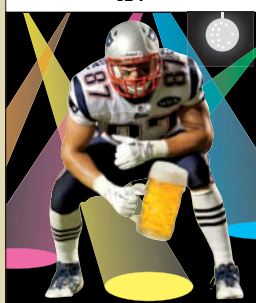

XIV

Mark Sanchez Will... Trademark "Butt Fumble" and Become a Billionaire in the Gay Porn Industry

At least he should. It's gotta be a more relaxing way to live than getting booed by your hometown crowd, battling young-uns for your starting spot, and cameo-ing in your coach's kinky sex fantasies.

XV

ROB GRONKOWSKI

Will Play a Game Drunk and Still Score Three Touchdowns

Over the past few off-seasons, it's become clear that Gronk likes a good time and, as long as he's putting up TDs, doesn't give a rat's ass who cares. The five surgeries, though? You kind of have to give a rat's ass about those.

XVI

THE MANNING BROTHERS

Will Star in Every Other Commercial Airing During NFL Broadcasts This Year

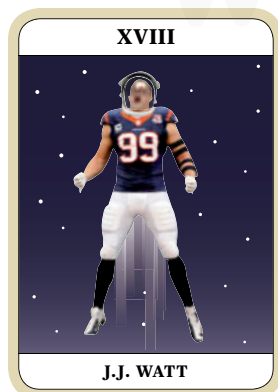

Peyton's got Buick, Gatorade, Papa John's, DirecTV, and Wheaties, while Eli has Toyota, Kraft, Samsung, Reebok, and Citizen. But given that they make a combined $40 million in salary, we guess they need the cash.

XVII

Cleatus the Fox Robot Will... Continue to Confuse and Annoy the Piss out of America

You probably didn't even realize the thing has a name, but Cleatus is that grating robot that pops up between commercials on Fox. What it does other than that, besides look like a CG project your 13-year-old nephew put together on his Nokia phone, we have no idea.

Will Dispel the Whole “White Men Can’t Jump” Myth Once and for All

Actually, strike that. The 6’5” 295-pounder put that to rest last year, when he racked up a preposterous 16 passes blocked (thanks to an insane 55-inch vert) on his way to being named Defensive Player of the Year. To quote DLR, might as well jump.

Robert Griffin III Will... Cause at Least Two Dozen D.C. Residents to Suffer Cardiac Arrests

Is there a more exciting player than RG3? Last season he set the NFL record for rookie passer rating, won the AP’s Offensive Rookie of the Year, and led the ‘Skins to their first division title since 1999. So it’s no wonder that Griffin’s torn ACL was treated as the worst tragedy to befall Washington since Lincoln decided to take in a performance at Ford’s Theatre.

GEORGE R.R. MARTIN’S “FANTASY” FOOTBALL PREVIEW

The Game of Thrones author (and die-hard Giants and Jets fan) weighs in on the season ahead.

1 BETTER LUCK NEXT YEAR, JETS

In the ’70s I wrote a story called “The Last Super Bowl” that took place between the Packers and the Jets and was played in New Jersey. Well, I was right about where the game would be played, but I don’t think the Jets will be there.

2 BILL BELICHICK WILL CONTINUE HIS REIGN OF TERROR

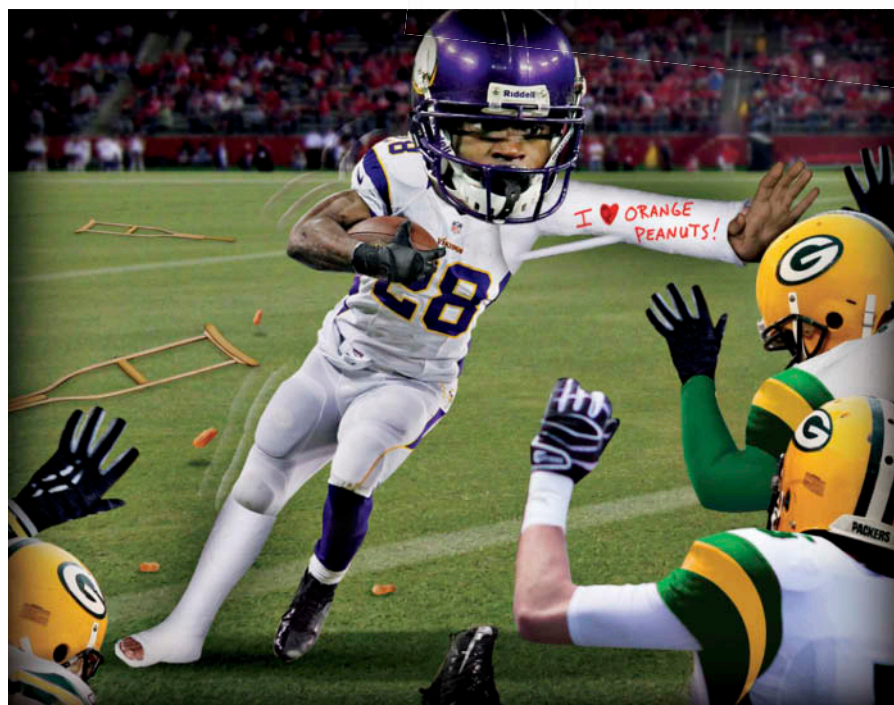

On my blog I call him Evil Little Bill. I have a horrible feeling that in some crucial game, he’ll bring Tim Tebow in and drive a spike straight through the hearts of Jets fans like me.

3 THE SUPER BOWL WILL BE COLD

I’m all for the game being played in New Jersey. In my story it was freezing rain, and I think football should be played in those conditions. That’s what you want.

4 AND IT WILL FEATURE THE PACKERS AND THE PATS...OR NOT

In the AFC you’ve got Evil Little Bill and the Pats, and in the NFC the Packers and the 49ers. But nobody’s expecting anything from the Giants, and that’s when they tend to do best.

ADRIAN PETERSON WILL... SNAP HIS FEMUR OR SOMETHING HORRIBLE LIKE THAT AND STILL RUSH FOR 200 YARDS

If Clay Matthews is the league’s Thor, Adrian Peterson is its Wolverine. How else can you explain his coming back from a shredded knee to lead the NFL in rushing and win the MVP? While AP may not have Wolverine’s adamantium-laced skeleton, he definitely has mutant-like regenerative healing powers. Maybe it’s all those orange peanuts.

History of the Man

Every guy knows the importance of a man cave. But you may be made for quiet reflection and unashamed pantslessness for thousands

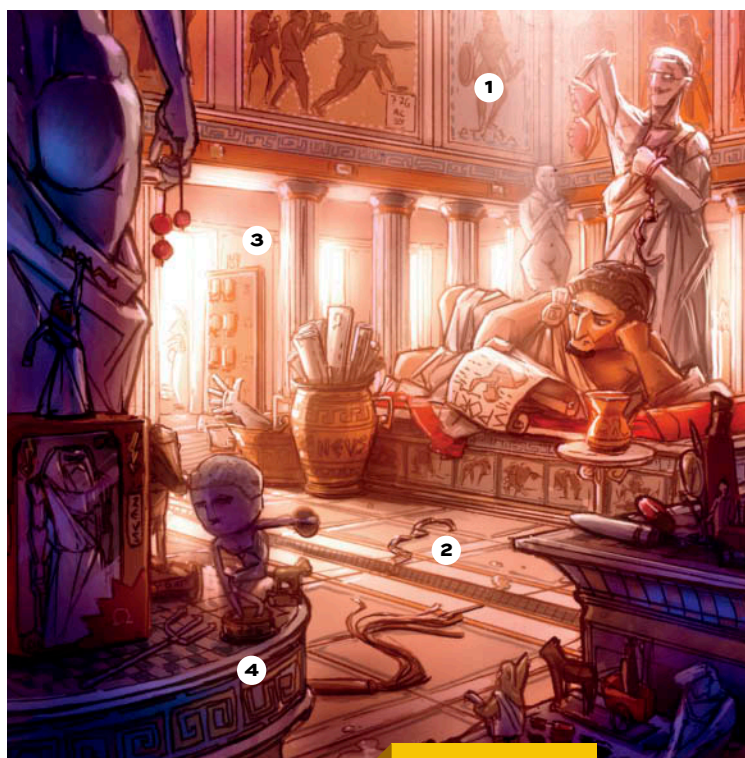

Prehistory

HIGHLIGHTS

The first man caves were, of course, caves. Dating back around 800,000 years, they were inhabited by the now extinct species Homo nohomobro. Manthropologists believe males of the species built these small enclosures as places to “just go bang rocks by myself for a while.” Fossil evidence also indicates males used the spots to celebrate after successful hunts while the tribe’s females gathered elsewhere in the shelter. Cranial reconstructions show that the eyes of the female were particularly adapted to rolling.

1. Thin layer of fossilized Buffalo pterodactyl wings deposited during tribal gatherings
2. Lava lamp made with actual lava
3. Comfy reclining slab
4. Wheel, up on a cement block. Evidence suggests occupant had one like it when he was 17 and was trying to restore it

Ancient Greece

HIGHLIGHTS

While much social discourse in ancient Greece took place in the public square, many philosophers did their best thinking in private chambers. These testicletriums were often elaborately decorated and gave citizens a quiet oasis to ponder the nature of existence, masculinity, and boobs. References to these dens appear in some major Greek writings. In fact, in one interpretation of Plato’s “Allegory of the Cave,” man leaves his dimly lit shelter not to seek enlightenment but rather because he has run out of chips.

1. Acoustics perfect for surround sound (60-person Greek chorus sold separately)
2. Tile floor with drainage system for easy post-orgy cleanup surprised to learn they're not a new trend—men have built rooms of years. Let's take a look at man's evolving need for personal space.

Colonial America

HIGHLIGHTS

As our young nation struggled for independence, so too did the architects of democracy, who used these spaces for everything from drafting legislation to spanking Puritans. Raucous parties were common: It's rumored John Hancock enjoyed putting his "John Hancock" on the forehead of whoever passed out first (and we don't mean his signature). It is not known which Founding Father first installed such a room in his home. Our guess is Ben Franklin. That dude invented pretty much everything, right?

1. March 1776 issue of Thomas Paine's Common Sense, featuring centerfold Betsy Ross (pictorial: "Star-Spangled Sex Appeal")
2. Secret supply of Just for Men wig-whitening gel
3. Hemp stash
4. Big Patriots fan, obviously

The Future

HIGHLIGHTS

In light of modern man's reliance on smartphones, tablets, e-mail, social media, and other digital services, it's hard to imagine how the man caves of tomorrow will isolate us even further from meaningful human interaction. Perhaps we'll discover an alien race whose man-cave technology far outpaces our own. But until the glorious day arrives when we finally turn outer space into personal space, we can only dream of what wonders await.

1. Hipster "fixie" jetpack
2. Authentic vintage beer sign from the year 2028
3. Xbox 360000 with 470-inch 3D holographic television
4. Entire man cave collapses into Jetsons-style smartphone app for light transport and easy installation anywhere

FLOYD MAYWEATHER WILL MAKE $100 MILLION THIS YEAR.

And He Just Might

All.

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF THE RICHEST MAN IN SPORTS.

Mayweather sits on top of the world...
and an ugly chair.

Sometimes even America's highest-paid athlete has to stand in line at the bank. Floyd Mayweather Jr., who is expected to earn about $100 million this year, is suffering the rare indignity of waiting for a teller at a nearly empty Bank of America in Midtown Manhattan. Boxing's flamboyant pound-for-pound king travels by private plane, lives in a sprawling Las Vegas mansion, owns a fleet of exotic luxury cars, and regularly flashes thick wads of cash on the reality series that hypes his fights, so it's somewhat surreal to see him silently waiting to step up to the glass. Mayweather's friend and entourage mainstay Mack is holding a pink backpack that I suspect is filled with those money bricks Floyd is so fond of waving around on-camera, the kind you see only in movies featuring bank robberies, drug deals, or ransom payoffs. Two hulking bodyguards eyeball the exits, while several other beefy dudes in THE MONEY TEAM jackets linger outside in front of an idling SUV.

I jokingly ask if he needs to make a cash withdrawal. Mayweather, wearing diamond-rimmed Louis Vuitton shades and a similarly iced-out chain and medalion, crisp blue jeans, and a long-sleeved graphic shirt, says, "Nah, I'm just taking care of some business for my family." As if on cue, one of his bodyguards steps between us and repeats, louder and more menacingly, "He's just taking care of some business for his family." Mayweather retrieves a brick of cash from the backpack and approaches the teller window. He turns to me and shouts, with mock anger, "Why you asking me if I'm getting money out? Mind your own business!"

The thing is, I'm not really supposed to be minding my own business. Maxim has asked me to tag along with the richest man in sports as he takes a media-heavy victory lap following his masterful dismantling of Robert Guerrero, once again showcasing his dominance as the most skilled boxer of his era. Mayweather says an injured right hand stopped him from knocking out the outgunned Guerrero, who, like Mayweather's previous 43 opponents, was doomed by the champ's bewildering speed, accuracy, and defensive wizardry. Mayweather has since predicted that his September 14 megafight against 23-year-old Mexican sensation Saul "Canelo" Alvarez, a fellow unbeaten super-welterweight titleholder, will end in a crowd-pleasing KO.

Mayweather-Alvarez—expected to be boxing's biggest fight since Mayweather defeated Oscar De La Hoya in 2007 in the highest-grossing pay-per-view of all time—is the second bout in Mayweather's ridiculously lucrative six-fight deal with Showtime, which pays him a guaranteed $32 million a fight, before the first pay-per-view buys are even tabulated. Mayweather, 36, says the 30-month deal will sound the final bell on his Hall of Fame career, thus far a flawless 44-0 with eight world titles across five weight divisions. As perhaps the most celebrated boxer since Mike Tyson, Mayweather, with his gaudy PPV hauls, has vaulted atop Sports Illustrated's list of America's highest-earning athletes, leaving LeBron James languishing in a distant second place.

MAYWEATHER WASN'T always the biggest draw in sports. Back when he was "Pretty Boy" Floyd, a slick, soft-spoken young fighter from Grand Rapids, Michigan, only diehard aficionados of the sweet science tuned in to his blowout victories. It wasn't until he transformed into "Money" Mayweather, a brash and borderline villainous character worthy of Vince McMahon, in the run-up to his 2007 victory over De La Hoya, that the wider public caught on. His antics on HBO's 24/7 made him a reality TV phenomenon, leading to a turn on Dancing With the Stars and regular appearances on the talk-show circuit. Soon even the most casual fans were paying to watch the obnoxious loudmouth in ostrich-skin trunks outbox his opponents, often entering the ring flanked by celebrity pals like Justin Bieber and Lil Wayne. The fact that they are still shelling out $69.95 a fight to see if someone can finally shut him up is just fine with Mayweather.

“Do I want people to root for me? Absolutely,” he says as we drive to an early-afternoon interview at the Huffington Post. “But there’s no difference between a fan who pays to see you win and a fan who pays to see you lose. A fan is a fan. All in all, they are the same person. If a person pays to see you lose 10 times...” His voice trails off as his personal assistant, a curvaceous young woman named Kitchie, begins massaging Mayweather’s bald head from the seat behind him.

“My focus is just being the best that I can be. All I do is work hard, day in and day out. My goal is to win. I don’t focus on keeping the ‘0.’ I focus on just being victorious with whatever opponent they put in front of me. Always want to retire healthy with all my faculties. That’s the main thing. That’s why I’m not trying to go out there and take any punishment.”

While Mayweather does have an uncanny ability to avoid punches in the ring, his public image has taken its share of hard knocks. He spent two months in jail last summer after pleading guilty to battery and no contest to harassment charges involving ex-girlfriend Josie Harris, the mother of three of his four children, stemming from a domestic incident that he has described as “overexaggerated” and “trumped up.” The highly publicized stint behind bars, coupled with his uncompromising attitude, may have something to do with his making precisely $0 in endorsements last year, a surprising fact that Mayweather blames on not being offered enough money by corporate suitors. He will probably never join the elite ranks of pitchers like LeBron, Tiger, or the Mannings, but that doesn’t mean Mayweather isn’t trying to branch out. He says that after retiring he intends to groom young fighters in the Mayweather Promotions stable. And while his now-defunct Philthy Rich Records label failed to spawn a single successful artist, Mayweather isn’t finished dabbling in show business just yet: He now says he wants to bring his trademark swagger to the big screen.

In addition to the wine cellar and crystal chandeliers dripping from 24-foot ceilings, Mayweather’s 22,000-square-foot Las Vegas mansion has a two-story movie theater, he tells me, and his favorite films are Training Day, Troy, Gladiator, and Let’s Do It Again, a 1975 comedy starring Bill Cosby, Sidney Poitier, and Jimmie Walker as a wimpy boxer who is hypnotized to become a champ. And if J.J. from Good Times can do it, why not Floyd Mayweather?

“I’m real good friends with Joel Silver,” he says of the blockbuster action producer behind The Matrix and Die Hard. Would he like to do a movie with Silver? “Well, we talk. You know, I keep my fingers crossed and hope for the best... I could be in front of or behind the camera. I think I could act...”

And then, just when it’s getting interesting, Mayweather falls asleep. Apparently the lethal combination of my questions and Kitchie’s massage has done what no opponent has managed to accomplish: knocked out the best boxer in the world.

Later Mayweather’s adviser, Leonard Ellerbe, takes time to crow about his fighter’s legacy: “Floyd is the most dominant athlete in all of sports. Period. Hands down. You tell me another athlete more dominant than Floyd. Can’t say a golfer, a basketball player, a football player. There’s not one!”

And it’s true. Love him or hate him, Mayweather’s undisputed dominance is indeed unmatched by any other contemporary athlete. But while Muhammad Ali had Joe Frazier and Sugar Ray Leonard had Marvin Hagler and Tommy Hearns, Mayweather has yet to face a rival who can truly test him. Great champions are judged on how they respond to great challengers, and so far, with the exception of his controversial 2002 victory over Jose Luis Castillo, Mayweather has never been pushed to the brink, instead steadily plowing through outclassed opponents.

“I DON’T MATCH MY SKILLS AGAINST FIGHTERS FROM OTHER ERAS, BUT I’VE NEVER GONE INTO ANY FIGHT THINKING ANOTHER MAN CAN DEFEAT ME.”

The bigger, stronger Alvarez is believed to be his most dangerous opponent in years, but Mayweather's freakish ring savvy and defensive supremacy still make him the favorite. Since there are so few active fighters who pose a threat, it is tempting to pit him against the legendary welterweights of bygone eras. It's a fistic fantasy game that Mayweather prefers not to indulge in. "I'm not here to match my skills against other fighters' of other eras," he says. "Of course, I've never gone into any fight thinking that another man can defeat me."

Mayweather was born into boxing. His father and current head trainer, Floyd Sr., was a world-rated welterweight who faced Leonard during his 35-fight pro career, before spending five years in prison for cocaine trafficking. Floyd's uncle Roger was the family's first champion, winning titles in two divisions and training Floyd for 13 years until Floyd Sr. was reinstalled for the Guerrero fight.

Their father-son relationship has been complicated ever since the day "Big Floyd" was blasted in the leg with a shotgun while holding up his one-year-old son as a human shield during an argument with Floyd's maternal uncle. He trained Floyd for much of his son's career before he was fired and replaced by Roger in 2000. But after Mayweather's unexpectedly grueling battle with Miguel Cotto in 2012, in which he actually suffered a bloody nose, Mayweather decided to make a change, and the prodigal father returned.

"It's going great," Mayweather says. "My dad is head trainer, and my uncle Roger is trainer number two. Roger has been fighting diabetes for a while, and he loses his vision sometimes. Sometimes his vision is there, and sometimes it's not.

And that's very, very risky—dealing with vision in a competitive fight. So my dad's happy and Roger's happy that we're all able to work hand in hand together."

IN THE LOBBY OF THE sleek high-rise that houses the Huffington Post, Mayweather leads the human centipede of hangers-on, including several bodyguards, Ellerbe, Kitchie, Mack, and his publicist, and notices me trailing behind. "Sorry I fell asleep, man," he says. He grabs an Almond Joy at the snack stand and poses for pictures with two giggling young women. Mayweather sits down for 10 minutes with a HuffPo reporter, and then we're off to the hip-hop station Hot 97, where he snaps a photo with rapper Talib Kweli before submitting to his longest interview of the day, with

“GAMBLING DOESN'T DEFINE WHO I AM AS A PERSON. I DIDN'T GAMBLE YESTERDAY. I'M NOT GONNA GAMBLE TODAY. IT'S NOT LIKE I'M ADDICTED.”

DJ Angie Martinez. This time there is a bag of Twizzlers in front of him.

Mayweather deftly fields the same questions that he's been getting all afternoon and counters with his regular talking points: He's focused on "building the Mayweather brand, building the Money Team brand, just staying positive"; opines that "the Money Team is more about, like, being rich at heart," and urges fans to visit its Web site and "go get a hat, go get a T-shirt"; downplays his prefight theatrics by saying, "That's television. That's training camp. That's [Showtime's] All Access. But it's not really bragging or boasting if you can do it"; and heaps pity upon former archrival Manny Pacquiao, who suffered a devastating knockout in his last fight: "I wish him nothing but the best. A crucial knockout like that can mess you up for the rest of your life."

An exasperated Martinez, unable to get Mayweather to switch into his full-throated "Money" persona, asks about his ex-best friend 50 Cent, who tried unsuccessfully to start a boxing promotional company with the champ before the two had a very public falling out.

"I'm curious about your relationship with 50 Cent," she says.

"I have a relationship with a female," he snaps. "In business, people don't see eye to eye. He went his way, and I went my way. He was my friend. I don't know if I was his friend, but we had a close bond, and we didn't see eye to eye."

50 has needed Mayweather in the press on topics ranging from the collapse of a potential fight with Pacquiao to his supposed lack of business acumen, describing Mayweather's financial planning as: "It's fight, get the money, spend the money, fight. Fight, get the money, spend the money, fight." The jab at Mayweather's free-spending ways recalled the long list of successful fighters who have ended up broke, from a down-on-his-luck Joe Louis being forced to take a job as a greeter at Caesars Palace to Mike Tyson declaring bankruptcy in 2003 after earning hundreds of millions during his Siberian tiger-owning, Lamborghini-hoarding heyday.

Mayweather may be the highest-paid man in sports, but like Tyson he is a ludicrously big spender. Besides the cars, the jewelry, the $10,000 dinners for his entourage, and the chartered planes, there is his love of sports betting, which is the stuff of Internet legend. Mayweather denied one widely disseminated report that he lost $3 million betting on the Michigan

Wolverines to beat the Alabama Crimson Tide in an NCAA football game last year, but while seven-figure bets may be rare, he certainly doesn't flinch at making six-figure ones, often posting photos of his betting slips on Twitter. Ahead of the seventh game of the Eastern Conference Finals, he was even rumored to have bet $5.9 million on the Heat. "Gambling doesn't define who I am as a person," he says. "I didn't gamble yesterday. I'm not gonna gamble today. It's nothing I have to do. It's not like I'm addicted."

OUR WAY TO CNN,

we stop at the 47th Street Diamond Exchange so Mayweather can get his diamond chain fixed. The proprietor of the Flawless Jewelers booth tries mightily to sell Mayweather on a tray of twinkling diamond watches as the $30,000 rope is being repaired, particularly pushing a bauble with a garish rainbow-hued band. "Who done this, my daughter?" Mayweather cracks.

Outside a crowd of gawkers snap cell phone pics through the glass. A delivery guy hands him a grease-stained sack of food. Mayweather pulls out a wad of hundreds, peels one off. The chain appears, and Mayweather announces, "I gotta do CNN, I'll be back tomorrow," and leads the centipede outside, where the mob surrounds his truck. Sitting in the car behind Mayweather, one of his bodyguards picks at fries in the greasy bag. "It happens all the time," he says of the scrum. "They see us with him and want to know who it is."

After a quick interview at CNN, we head to BET's 106 & Park, the day's last stop. We are ushered backstage, where a producer preps Mayweather as he sits on a couch next to his longtime fiancée, Shantel Jackson. "Y'all got lotion?" Mayweather asks. Minutes later he walks out to whoops from the high school kids in the audience and sits down to chat with co-host Bow Wow. And from behind his diamond sunglasses, Floyd Mayweather says for the umpteenth time that day, but almost certainly not the last time ever: "The Money Team is all about being rich at heart." 🐞

Don Rickles

At 87 years old, the notorious insult comic reveals his darkest secret: He's actually nice. By Patrick Carone

Hello, Mr. Rickles.

Oh, hi, Patrick! I didn't think I'd ever get a chance to talk to you. I've been around a lot of years, and you don't get a chance to talk to Patrick very often!

Well, thanks! So you just got a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Friars Club. Do you remember the first time you were roasted?

Oh, sure, it was years ago. In those days it was Dean Martin and Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jr. who did the roasting.

Frank Sinatra was known as a tough guy. Were you ever scared of him?

Well, what I did with Frank not that many people could do. He'd come up to me at dinner, and I'd say, "Frank, I'm talking!" He'd start laughing like crazy. He respected me, and I respected him.

Nobody else talked to him like that?

Nobody. We had a great camaraderie. In fact, the highlight of my career was being at the inaugural gala of Ronald Reagan, and I owe that to Mr. Sinatra. Frank told them I was going to perform with him. They said, "No, Frank." He said, "Let me put it this way: If you don't have Rickles, you're not gonna have me." I'll never forget that.

How many presidents have you met over the years?

I met them all, except Jimmy Carter. Bob Newhart and I tried to visit him in Washington, but he just left his sweater on the chair. We never got to see him.

Have you met President Obama?

No, I haven't. It's a shame he's not going to have the opportunity to meet me. With my reputation, a lot of people—even important people—are afraid. But I've never been mean-spirited, in my opinion. I never did anything below the belt.

What's the trick to a perfect insult?

There's no trick; it's an attitude. Even when I was in high school and the Navy, I was the guy who could rip somebody and they'd laugh at it. It's nothing you can rehearse—it was just in my personality. By the way, I was nice to the people in the Philippines for the two and a half years I was there, because I knew eventually I'd have to kiss up to them so my grandchildren could have toys.

How did you become an insult comic?

I worked as a comedian in real tough joints in the old days, with striptease artists and what have you. They'd ask when the girls were coming on, and I'd say, "Listen, you see that shirt? Get rid of it, you're ridiculous!" I'd start to talk to the audience, and it worked for me. Also, I've never had a writer, and I'm proud of that. Everything I've performed has been from my own head.

Have you ever gone too far?

After over 50 years of headlining, I've been received very beautifully. But I always say, when you're onstage you can't please everybody. I'm sure there are people who may not take to what I do, but that's OK. Thank God the majority are in my corner. Otherwise I wouldn't make enough money to feed my hunting dogs.

Where did you get the nickname Mr. Warmth?

From Johnny Carson. He was another hero of mine. Every time we were together, it was like chemistry.

You're the voice of Mr. Potato Head in the Toy Story movies. Are you a fan of those?

Well, sure. I busted my bird for 60 years in the business, but my grandkids only know me as Mr. Potato Head.

Are there any bad habits you've given up?

I stopped smoking. But my personality I still have. I get up in the morning and not everybody loves me, so if you want to call that a bad habit, there's that.

Do you have a signature drink?

Vodka on the rocks.

Do you remember the worst hangover you ever had?

Remember? No. In the Navy we had trouble finding the ship, for crying out loud!

You've been married for 48 years. What's your secret?

Listen, the greatest advice is to be dear friends and care about each other. So many young people think the big sex act is the whole movie, but that's not the case. You need to be able to talk and laugh and cry together. By the way, you never thought I was this nice, right? ♡

Life is good for Jason Sudeikis. He's engaged to Olivia Wilde (only one of the world's most beautiful women), he's the biggest name on Saturday Night Live (if he comes back, fingers crossed), and he's starring in We're the Millers, the shoot-soda-out-your-nose funniest movie of the year (think Vacation, if Clark Griswold were a drug dealer and his wife a stripper). We sat down with the lucky duck to talk basketball, fashion, and going topless. And when he ordered a Jack Daniel's at noon, we knew he was our kind of guy.

You seem like a pretty well-dressed dude, but growing up in Kansas, did you rock cowboy boots and Canadian tuxedos?

No, but kids I went to school with certainly did. I was more into parachute pants and Michael Jackson jackets with lots of zippers. And I played basketball, so I had the Jordan 1's. Of course, now that I have some money in the bank, I get shoes for free.

Do you get dressed thinking about photographers lurking about?

No. But it is annoying when I want to go for a walk with my fiancée and there are three guys with cameras waiting outside my apartment. The biggest bummer is coming out of the ocean on vacation and seeing some photographer crouched behind a tree.

Do you realize that when you Google your name, the first thing that comes up is "Jason Sudeikis shirtless"?

Oh, God, you should really go home and clear your search history. I guess people just want to know about body-hair patterns of Midwestern males. Maybe it's because I make it a rarity; but, I mean, it's not like I wear a T-shirt when I go swimming.

Maybe they just want shots of your fiancée. She is a former number one on Maxim's Hot 100. You know, being beautiful is actually only like fifth or sixth of the things that are amazing about her. She's really hilarious. And she loves basketball!

So was she kidding when she said she was worried that she wasn't pretty enough for you?

Well, that's very flattering, but it obviously doesn't make sense. I think people look at us and wonder what kind of information I have on her to get so lucky. Like, I must have video of her taking a bomb into the White House.

We're the Millers is your third movie with Jennifer Aniston, another looker. Yeah, in Horrible Bosses, my character sleeps with her. But playing a stripper in this one, she looks amazing. It's such a vulnerable thing for somebody to do. I mean, I never take my shirt off even on Saturday Night Live.

Were you into SNL growing up?

Isn't every kid into it, at least for a couple of years? I never thought I'd wind up on the show, of course, but my freshman year of high school I got to go to a taping when my uncle, George Wendt, was the host, doing those "Superfans" sketches about Da Bears. Elvis Costello was the musical guest, which I couldn't have cared less about at the time. I would have preferred Vanilla Ice or Color Me Badd.

Do you know what your future is with the show?

No, not yet. I need to discuss it with Lorne Michaels. Who knows? I might be done with showbiz in a year. Or showbiz might be done with me.

You started in the writers' room. Why not write a movie for yourself?

Kristen Wiig did a great job of that with Bridesmaids. On SNL we create, we destroy, and we keep looking forward, because there's no time to think. And it's not because we're smarter or better than other people. It's because we're not smarter and don't know any better. 🐼

Olivia Wilde

A lot has changed since Olivia appeared on the cover of Maxim fresh off her victory as 2009's Hot 100 No.1. Back then she was insanely gorgeous and incredibly funny. These days she's...well, insanely gorgeous and incredibly funny. At that time she was starring in the computer-game epic Tron: Legacy. Now she has Ron Howard's car-racing flick Rush and Spike Jones' mind-bendy Her on the way. Also? She just got engaged to SNL superman and this month's style icon, Jason Sudeikis. If you need a ring boy, give us a call!
